Master of Science in Education

for Elementary & Secondary School Teachers

Graduate Teacher Education Program (GTEP) International Master of Science in Education for Elementary & Secondary School Teachers

Teachers in today's world need skills, knowledge and techniques not even considered 10 or 20 years ago. Yet gaining those professional skills can be a challenge. CAMPUS Arts and Sciences has joined in partnership with one of America's premier graduate schools of education, Nova Southeastern University of Fort Lauderdale, Florida, to create a dynamic and challenging new International Master of Science in Education degree.

The degree program is offered entirely at CAMPUS Arts and Sciences facilities in Kifissia (Athens), and is taught by Nova Southeastern University's distinguished education faculty. The result combines the worldwide expertise and cutting-edge content offered in Nova Southeastern University's graduate education programs, with the convenience and support capabilities of CAMPUS Arts and Sciences.

On-site support is provided by a dedicated Program coordinator and staff housed at CAMPUS Arts and Sciences.

Student cohorts of 25 or more move through the program together to completion, which enhances the consistency, interaction and collaboration. The 10 core courses are followed by a capstone experience which applies elements of the curriculum to a significant research project.
